The Basics of Indian Artifact Hunting

The first step to Indian artifact hunting is to learn about the different types of artifacts that you can find. Arrowheads are the most common type of artifact, but you can also find other items such as pottery, tools, and jewelry. Once you know what to look for, you can start hunting for artifacts in your area.

There are a few different ways to find Indian artifacts. You can surface hunt, which involves looking for artifacts on the ground. You can also dig for artifacts, but this requires a permit from the landowner.

When you're surface hunting, it's important to pay attention to the ground conditions. Artifacts are most likely to be found in areas that have been plowed or eroded. You should also look for areas that are near water, as this is where Native Americans often camped.

If you're digging for artifacts, it's important to be careful not to damage them. You should use a trowel or other sharp object to dig slowly and carefully.

The Best Places to Hunt for Indian Artifacts

The best places to hunt for Indian artifacts are areas that were once inhabited by Native Americans. This includes areas near rivers, lakes, and other water sources. You can also find artifacts in abandoned fields and other areas that have been disturbed by human activity.

If you're not sure where to start looking for Indian artifacts, you can check with your local historical society or museum. They may be able to provide you with information about potential hunting sites.

How to Identify Indian Artifacts

Once you've found an Indian artifact, it's important to be able to identify it. This can be done by comparing it to pictures of known artifacts or by consulting with an expert.

There are a few things to look for when identifying Indian artifacts. The first is the material. Artifacts can be made from a variety of materials, including stone, bone, wood, and metal.

The second is the shape. Artifacts can come in a variety of shapes, including arrowheads, spear points, knives, and tools.

The third is the decoration. Artifacts can be decorated with a variety of designs, including geometric patterns, animal figures, and human figures.

The Value of Indian Artifacts

The value of Indian artifacts varies depending on a number of factors, including the type of artifact, the material, the condition, and the rarity.

Arrowheads are the most common type of Indian artifact, and they can be worth anywhere from a few dollars to hundreds of dollars. Spear points and knives are also relatively common, and they can be worth anywhere from $50 to $500.

Tools and other artifacts can be worth more than arrowheads and spear points, especially if they are made from rare materials or if they are in good condition.

Indian Artifact Hunting Laws

It's important to be aware of the Indian artifact hunting laws in your area before you start hunting. In some areas, it is illegal to dig for artifacts without a permit. In other areas, it is illegal to collect artifacts from public land.

It's always best to check with your local historical society or museum before you start hunting for Indian artifacts. They can provide you with information about the laws in your area and help you get the necessary permits.

Indian artifact hunting is a fun and rewarding hobby that can be enjoyed by people of all ages. It's a great way to learn about the history of your area and to find unique and beautiful artifacts. If you're interested in getting started with Indian artifact hunting, this article is for you.
