The Poem

I had a little ball of snow,

As white as any lamb,

And every day I made it grow,

By rolling it in my hand.

I rolled it up, and rolled it down,
And rolled it round and round,
And every day it grew so brown,
I thought it would not be found.

One day it grew so very large,
I could not hold it all,
And so I let it roll at large,
And down the hill it did fall.

It rolled and rolled, and rolled away,
And down into a hollow,
And there it stayed, and there it lay,

For years, and years to follow.
