As the months went by, the mother's fears grew. She knew that her son was using drugs, but she didn't know what to do. She was afraid to confront him, afraid that he would only get angry and deny it. She was afraid that if she pushed him too hard, he would run away. So she kept her worries to herself.

But one day, the mother's worst fears were realized. Her son was arrested for possession of drugs. She was devastated. She didn't know what to do. She felt like she had failed as a mother. She felt like she had lost her son.
